Preface

Chapter 1 Strategic management in perspective: a step in the professionalisation of management

1.1 Introduction

1.2 The origins of modern concepts of strategic management: the new role of leader

1.3 Ways of thinking: stable global structures and fluid local interactions

1.4 Outline of the book

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Chapter 2 Thinking about strategy and organisational change: the implicit assumptions distinguishing one theory from another

2.1 Introduction

2.2 The phenomena of interest: dynamic human organisations

2.3 Making sense of the phenomena: realism, relativism and idealism

2.4 Four questions to ask in comparing theories of organisational strategy and change

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Part 1 Systemic ways of thinking about strategy and organisational

Chapter 3 The origins of systems thinking in the Age of Reason

3.1 Introduction

3.2 The Scientific Revolution and rational objectivity

3.3 The eighteenth-century German philosopher Immanuel Kant: natural systems and autonomous individuals

3.4 Systems thinking in the twentieth century: the notion of human systems

3.5 Thinking about organisations and their management: science and systems thinking

3.6 How systems thinking deals with the four questions

3.7 Summary

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Chapter 4 Thinking in terms of strategic choice: cybernetic systems, cognitivist and humanistic psychology

4.1 Introduction

4.2 Cybernetic systems: importing the engineers idea of self-regulation and control into understanding human activity

4.3 Formulating and implementing long-term strategic plans

4.4 Cognitivist and humanistic psychology: the rational and the emotional individual

4.5 Leadership and the role of groups

4.6 Key debates

4.7 How strategic choice theory deals with the four key questions

4.8 Summary

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Chapter 5 Thinking in terms of organisational learning and knowledge creation: systems dynamics, cognitivist, humanistic and constructivist psychology

5.1 Introduction

5.2 Systems dynamics: nonlinearity and positive feedback

5.3 Personal mastery and mental models: cognitivist psychology

5.4 Building a shared vision and team learning: humanistic psychology

5.5 The impact of vested interests on organisational learning

5.6 Knowledge management: cognitivist and constructivist psychology

5.7 Key debates

5.8 How learning organisation theory deals with the four key questions

5.9 Summary

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Chapter 6 Thinking in terms of organisational psychodynamics: open systems and psychoanalytic perspectives

6.1 Introduction

6.2 Open systems theory

6.3 Psychoanalysis and unconscious processes

6.4 Open systems and unconscious processes

6.5 Leaders and groups

6.6 How open systems/psychoanalytic perspectives deal with the four key questions

6.7 Summary

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Chapter 7 Thinking about strategy process from a systemic perspective: using a process to control a process

7.1 Introduction

7.2 Rational process and its critics: bounded rationality

7.3 Rational process and its critics: trial-and-error action

7.4 A contingency view of process

7.5 Institutions, routines and cognitive frames

7.6 Process and time

7.7 Strategy process: a review

7.8 The activity-based view

7.9 The systemic way of thinking about process and practice

7.10 Summary

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Chapter 8 A review of systemic ways of thinking about strategy and organisational dynamics: key challenges for alternative ways of thinking

8.1 Introduction

8.2 The claim that there is a science of organisation and management

8.3 The polarisation of intention and emergence

8.4 The belief that organisations are systems in the world or in the mind

8.5 Conflict and diversity

Table of Contents

8.6 Summary and key questions to be dealt with in Parts 2 and 3 of this book

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Chapter 9 Extending and challenging the dominant discourse on organisations: thinking about participation and practice

9.1 Introduction

9.2 Second-order systems thinking

9.3 Social constructionist approaches

9.4 Communities of practice

9.5 Practice and process schools

9.6 Critical management studies

9.7 Summary

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Part 2 The challenge of complexity to ways of thinking

Chapter 10 The complexity sciences: the sciences of uncertainty

10.1 Introduction

10.2 Mathematical chaos theory

10.3 The theory of dissipative structures

10.4 Complex adaptive systems

10.5 Different interpretations of complexity

10.6 Summary

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Chapter 11 Systemic applications of complexity sciences to organisations: restating the dominant discourse

11.1 Introduction

11.2 Modelling industries as complex systems

11.3 Understanding organisations as complex systems

11.4 How systemic applications of complexity sciences deal with the four key questions

11.5 Summary

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Part 3 Complex responsive processes as a way of thinking about strategy and organisational dynamics

Chapter 12 Responsive processes thinking: the interplay of intentions

12.1 Introduction

12.2 Responsive processes thinking

12.3 Chaos, complexity and analogy

12.4 Time and responsive processes

12.5 The differences between systemic process, strong or endogenous process and responsive processes thinking

12.6 Summary

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Chapter 13 The emergence of organisational strategy in local communicative interaction: complex responsive processes of conversation

13.1 Introduction

13.2 Human communication and the conversation of gestures: the social act

13.3 Ordinary conversation in organisations

13.4 The dynamics of conversation

13.5 Leaders and the activities of strategising

13.6 Summary

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Chapter 14 The link between the local communicative interaction of strategising and the population-wide patterns of strategy

14.1 Introduction

14.2 Human communication and the conversation of gestures: processes of generalising and particularising

14.3 The relationship between local interaction and population-wide patterns

14.4 The roles of the most powerful

14.5 Summary

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Chapter 15 The emergence of organisational strategy in local communicative interaction: complex responsive processes of ideology and power relating

15.1 Introduction

15.2 Cult values

15.3 Desires, values and norms

Table of Contents

15.4 Ethics and leadership

15.5 Power, ideology and the dynamics of inclusion/exclusion

15.6 Complex responsive processes/perspectives on decision making

15.7 Summary

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Chapter 16 Different modes of articulating patterns of interaction emerging across organisations: strategy narratives and strategy models

16.1 Introduction

16.2 The emergence of themes in the narrative patterning of ordinary, everyday conversation

16.3 Narrative patterning of experience and preoccupation in the game

16.4 Reflecting on experience: the role of narrative and storytelling

16.5 Reflecting on experience: the role of second-order abstracting

16.6 Reasoning, measuring, forecasting and modelling in strategic management

16.7 Summary

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Chapter 17 Complex responsive processes of strategising: acting locally on the basis of global goals, visions, expectations and intentions for the whole organisation over the long-term future

17.1 Introduction

17.2 Strategic choice theory as second-order abstraction

17.3 The learning organisation as second-order abstraction

17.4 Institutions and legitimate structures of authority

17.5 Strategy as identity narrative

17.6 Summary

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection

Chapter 18 Complex responsive processes: implications for thinking about organisational dynamics and strategy

18.1 Introduction

18.2 Key features of the complex responsive processes perspective

18.3 Refocusing attention on strategy and change

18.4 Refocusing attention on control and performance improvement

Table of Contents

18.5 Implications for thinking about research

18.6 Rethinking the roles of leaders and managers

18.7 Summary

Further reading

Questions to aid further reflection
