Leseverstehen Test 8: Across the Barricades

The following text is from the novel Across the Barricades by Joan Lingard. The novel is about Protestant Sadie and Catholic Kevin, who live in Belfast, Northern Ireland, at the beginning of The Troubles¹.

- ▶ First read the text.
- ▶ Then do the tasks.

1 “Sadie! Sadie Jackson!”

She looked round. For a moment she could not see who was calling her. The pavement was thick with people heading homewards. Then she saw him coming through the midst of the throng. Tall, dark, broader than she had remembered, but with the same bright spark in his eyes. She waited for him to reach her.

“Kevin,” she said. “Kevin McCoy.”

“It’s me all right.” He was grinning.

“Haven’t seen you for ages. It must be nearly three years.”

25 “Suppose it is. It’s funny seeing you again after so long.”

They only lived a few streets away from one another but it might as well have been a thousand miles. They stood and looked at one another and let the hurrying people push round them.

“Fancy a cup of coffee?” asked Kevin. “Have you time?”

“Don’t see why not,” said Sadie.

35 There were many good reasons why not, her mother would say, but Sadie was not one to be put off by reasons, especially her mother’s.

They walked side by side to a coffee bar without talking. They felt a little awkward² walking together but once inside the café, seated across a table from one another, their tongues broke free again.

35 “How’s Brede?” she asked.

“How’s Tommy?” he asked at the same time, and they laughed.

“Brede’s fine,” he said. “She’s working as a nursery nurse.”

40 “She always was soft on kids, wasn’t

she? Tommy’s in the yard apprenticed as a welder³.”

They were silent for a moment, Sadie thinking of Kevin’s sister Brede and Kevin of Sadie’s brother Tommy as each had been three years ago. They had all been at school then, different schools. They had started as enemies, had even fought with stones and fists; then for a while they had been friends but eventually had drifted apart because of the difficulties of meeting.

“And you, Sadie, what are you doing?”

55 “Me?” She shook her long fair hair back over her shoulder in a gesture that he remembered. “Well, first I went into an office” – she wrinkled her nose – “and then I got a job in a linen mill . . .”

60 He laughed. “You always were a restless one!”

“Look who’s talking!” They were used to sparring⁴ with one another; it came back to them easily. It was as if the three years had never been.

“I’ve had the same job since the day I left school,” he said. “So there!”

“Is that so?”

70 “That’s right. I’m working for Kate’s da⁵ in his scrapyards⁶. [. . .]”

[. . .]

Scrap in the streets: burnt-out cars and buses and armoured⁷ vehicles, torn-up paving stones, barbed-wire⁸ coiled to form barricades. And along the streets went soldiers on patrol with fingers on the triggers of their guns, men and women eyeing them watchfully, suspiciously, and bands of children playing at fighting and sometimes

Hörverstehen Test 8: Saint Patrick's Day

1 On March 17, people around the world celebrate the Irish holiday of Saint Patrick's Day. It is a major holiday in Ireland, but the rest of the world has influenced its celebration as much as the Irish themselves.

Most Americans think of Saint Patrick's Day as a big party, but its beginnings in Ireland were religious. Ireland is a mostly Roman Catholic country. Saint Patrick lived on the island more than 1,500 years ago, and he is widely considered to have established Christianity in the country. The Church honoured him with a holy day in the 17th century. March 17 marks the date of his death. Saint Patrick is believed to have served in Ireland as a Catholic bishop. One story says that he drove all the snakes out of Ireland. The average Irish person honoured March 17 quietly. Attending church services was the main activity. In fact, most businesses that served alcohol would close on that day. In the early 1900s, Ireland's government made Saint Patrick's Day an official holiday. By the 1960s, towns across Ireland started celebrating the holiday with parades and music. In Ireland today, Saint Patrick's Day is a four-day public celebration that includes parades, music, food, and games.

For Irish people living outside Ireland, Saint Patrick's Day became a chance to celebrate their Irish identity and culture. Now, countries and cities around the world celebrate March 17 in creative ways. Many countries hold Saint Patrick's Day parades. Famous monuments, including the Great Wall of China, the Colosseum in Rome, the Niagara Falls, and the Gateway of India in Mumbai will all be coloured by green light for the day.

The U.S. is especially famous for its Saint Patrick's

Day celebrations. Many cities with large Irish communities, like Boston, New York and Chicago, hold parades and parties. Cities will also colour local rivers green for the day. Ireland is known as the "Emerald Isle" because the country is covered in deep green grass.

However, many modern Saint Patrick's Day traditions were invented by the Irish in America. In the U.S. on Saint Patrick's Day, it is common for Americans to drink green beer or eat corned beef and cabbage, but many of these traditions are not really Irish. Neil O'Flaherty, an Irish citizen now living in the U.S., remembers celebrating Saint Patrick's Day much differently than it is now. Back then, for Catholic families in Ireland, it was the day you had to go to church. It had much more the feeling of a religious holiday than a public holiday. He also remembers everyone wearing small, three-leaf plant pieces, called shamrocks.

No matter how people celebrate March 17, Saint Patrick's Day is a day for everyone to be Irish.

Top travel tips for Ireland

You like to travel and get information about different countries of the world. That's why you love the travel podcast "Nancy travels the world". In this episode, Nancy is giving tips for visiting Ireland.

First read the tasks. Then listen to the podcast.

While you are listening, tick the correct box.

Now listen to the podcast and do the tasks.

Hey, fellow travelers! I'm Nancy from the US, and thanks for listening to my latest episode from my travel blog NANCY TRAVELS THE WORLD. This week, I'm in Ireland.

1 Tip 1

Now one reason why tourists love Ireland is because people speak English here. If you've learnt English at school, you won't have major problems.

5 However, some things may be hard to understand, at least for me as an American.

Tip 2

When tourists come to Ireland, they nearly always come to Dublin first. It's the only city on the island
10 with a population of more than a million people, but thinking Dublin is Ireland is a big mistake. This country has so much more to see. The countryside is beautiful: from the most western point of mainland Europe on the Atlantic Coast, to the Wicklow
15 Mountains where you can go rock climbing, trekking and fishing.

Tip 3

Now don't freak out because of the prices in Dublin. It's one of the most expensive capitals in the 20 world. You'll probably have to pay at least 20 euros for a meal or around 6 euros for a sandwich. But don't worry, prices outside Dublin are a lot cheaper.

Tip 4

The best way to travel around the country is prob-
25 ably by bus, but don't panic if your bus driver starts driving and you think, "Oh my God! He's driving on the wrong side of the road!" The Irish drive on the left, so if you rent a car, be careful and don't drive too fast on Ireland's narrow country 30 lanes.

Tip 5

If you travel to Cork, you must visit Blarney Castle, one of Ireland's greatest treasures, built in 1446. Legend says if you kiss the Blarney Stone – a rock 35 in the castle wall – you'll be able to communicate so much better and you'll never be lost for words!

Tip 6

But wherever you go, don't forget to take a break in the afternoon and have a good old 'cuppa'. Irish 40 people just love their afternoon tea and biscuits. I learned from the Irish that 'having a cuppa' means so much more than the words. You sit together with other people, you drink tea, you talk, and you learn about each other.

45 So that's all from me this week! Enjoy your trip to Ireland and check out my next travel blog which is from Norway.

In 30 seconds you will hear the text again so you can check your answers.
